NB: subgroups with a n-size less than 50 (<50) are not shown on these cross-tabs. We choose not to display N<50 subgroups because the sample is too small to have statistical significance. We did, however, take samples of these subgroups for representational and weighting purposes to accurately reflect the electorate makeup. Some values may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

Congress is currently scheduled to go into recess for weeks, which means that most legislators will leave DC and no legislation will be passed until they return. Should Congress instead stay in DC in order to work and respond to the coronavirus emergency?

If Congress leaves DC for congressional recess, they will be unable to vote on any legislation until they return, because current rules require them to be physically present while voting. This also means that Congressmembers who are self isolating are unable to vote and the only way to pass legislation would be to have Congress meet in person, potentially exposing lawmakers to the coronavirus. Should Congress pass a rule change to allow them to use technology to vote remotely?

The Senate recently passed a stimulus bill which would provide $1,200 payments to individuals, boost unemployment benefits, and provide $500 billion in loans to businesses among other measures. Some people are suggesting we need to pass another relief bill which would do more to provide additional resources to Americans, ensure everyone has access to free treatment for coronavirus, and ensure there is enough protective equipment to provide healthcare workers. Those supporting doing more say that the existing stimulus has been far too small to meet the financial and public health challenges facing the country from the coronavirus. Those opposed to doing more say that we have already spent trillions of dollars on stimulus and the private sector and individuals should be able to provide for themselves from here. Do you support or oppose Congress passing another relief bill?

President Trump has been giving daily press conferences about the state of coronavirus in the US. Some people say that networks should stop broadcasting these press conferences live because they're filled with misinformation, including promoting a supposed "cure" to the virus which has already caused one person to die--and instead cover them after they occur, with fact-checking and context. Other people say that the media has a responsibility to broadcast Trump speaking because he is the president. Should networks stop live broadcasting Trump's press conferences about coronavirus?
