

DATA FOR PROGRESS

From January 6 to January 7, 2021, Data for Progress conducted a survey of 1156 likely voters nationally using web panel respondents. The sample was weighted to be representative of likely voters by age, gender, education, race, and voting history. The survey was conducted in English. The margin of error is ±2.9 percentage points.

NB: subgroups with a n-size less than 50 (<50) are not shown on these cross-tabs. We choose not to display N<50 subgroups because the sample is too small to have statistical significance. We did, however, take samples of these subgroups for representational and weighting purposes to accurately reflect the electorate makeup. Some values may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

[2] Some lawmakers in Congress are proposing providing families with refundable tax credits to help cover the cost of childcare and decrease the child poverty rate.

When thinking about this, which statement comes closer to your view, even if neither is exactly?

Response	Topline	Democrat	Independent / Third Party	Republican	Female	Male	Under 45	45+	No College	College	Black or African American	White	Not Christian	Christian	Evangelical
We should create these tax credits because raising a child shouldn't be a financial anchor and hard-working American families deserve help to cover the high costs of childcare.	59	77	59	40	60	58	66	55	59	60	77	55	67	59	53
We should not create these tax credits because this is just another expense the taxpayer can't afford. In the long run this higher debt is something we'll pass onto our children.	30	16	30	46	28	32	26	33	29	32	18	34	22	32	35

[3] Some lawmakers in Congress are proposing reallocating a portion of the U.S. military's $740 billion budget — the largest in the world — to fund investments here at home, by increasing access to nutrition assistance projects, building additional housing, and tackling childhood poverty by increasing the size of the child tax credit.
