

DATA FOR PROGRESS

From May 5 to 6, 2021, Data for Progress conducted a survey of 664 likely voters nationally using web panel respondents. The sample was weighted to be representative of likely voters by age, gender, education, race, and voting history. The survey was conducted in English. The margin of error is ± 4 percentage points.

NB: subgroups with a n-size less than 50 (<50) are not shown on these cross-tabs. We choose not to display N<50 subgroups because the sample is too small to have statistical significance. We did, however, take samples of these subgroups for representational and weighting purposes to accurately reflect the electorate makeup. Some values may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

[1] The U.S. Supreme Court, in a controversial series of decisions known as the Insular Cases, ruled in the early 1900s that residents of overseas U.S. territories -- the overwhelming majority of whom were and are racial or ethnic minorities -- are not guaranteed the same constitutional rights and protections as residents of other parts of the United States. These decisions were decided by the same Justices who decided Plessy v. Ferguson, which upheld racial segregation laws, and were grounded in the same kind of racial hostility. Yet while Plessy has long since been overruled by the Supreme Court, the Insular Cases have not and continue to result in discrimination against residents of the territories.
